CHARTERS.

The method of granting charters in this country deserves more consideration than it generally receives. The present obsolete system of applying to the Privy Council, and awaiting the will of the government of the day, is more fitted for the days of Noah than for the present days of a nineteenth century kingdom that prides itself upon its commercial progress and advancement. That great partiality has been shown is evinced by the constant shelving of the application made on behalf of the Gazette to make room for more recent applications. An example of this was again given on Thursday, when charters were granted to the Pauloa Ranch Co., to Wilder's Steam Shipping Co. and others. We do not say that these charters should have been refused, but we do say that the Gazette charter should not be persistently withheld from the consideration of the Privy Council. We hope that, at the next session of the Legislature, the recent suggestions of the government organ will be adopted, and that an act will be passed enabling any body of persons to incorporate themselves, at any time, by complying with certain necessary regulations, without the delay involved by the present obsolete method, and without the necessity of "persuading."

"RECOLLECTIONS OF AN ORIENTAL TOUR."

Mr. James Bryce, M. P., having been introduced to the audience at the Y. M. C. A. on Thursday evening, said that he merely proposed to give an informal conversation of his recollections of a few journeys to the east. Honolulu was so far west from England, that it seemed to be almost east again, and he was surprised to find here all the civilization to which he had been accustomed in Europe, and the contrast between Hawaiian and European institutions was very slight. The eastern countries of Europe always stand the same, there is no change from one century to another; those ideas formed in our childhood, from books we read relating to the east, remain unchanged, and we almost expect to see biblical characters step out into the streets. The ox still treads on the corn, which is spread out on a large floor, the wind carries away the chaff and the wheat is left. People living in the town, sit on the roof tops in the evening, and there are the same ideas, as of old, of "keeping within their gates."

In Europe the only dangers now, when traveling, are from railway accidents; in the east, bands of thieves infest the roads. Here, you have no unjust judges; there, if involved in litigation, you must bribe the judge, and are at once asked what you will give. In the Turkish empire, a most striking feature is the social position, and the distinction that prevails between different races. You will find four or five nations occupying the same soil, governed by the same laws and paying the same taxes, yet they are all distinct and have nothing to do with one another. The reason why they are so distinct, you can hardly understand here, there is no friendship, no intercommunication and no intermarriage. Here, the Chinese people are, I believe, distinct from the other races, but there is a reason for this, because they propose to return to their homes. Mohammedanism keeps the east in a state of inaction, and there is a spirit of self-conceit on the Mohammedan population. They think themselves superior to any infidel. They say that Christians are a little superior to fire worshippers and idolaters. They think civilization of no account, they won't try to improve; in cases of plagues they take no sanitary precautions, believing that they must die.

The women are denied any rights, but are placed under the control of their fathers and brothers. The best women are those who are least heard. Nothing irritates more than to see the way in which they are treated; their faces are always covered, they have no education, and, when traveling, they are huddled together in a corner of the stern of the ship, exposed to all kinds of weather. The cities of the east are generally very quiet, there is nothing to do and plenty of time to do it in. There appears to be no business, as there are no shops. All buying and selling is done in bazaars. A bazaar is a series of sheds and alleys roofed in; the dealers sit in them, and are never anxious to trade. It takes several hours to buy or sell anything worth more than $3. (The lecturer then gave an amusing account of an attempt to purchase a carpet.)

In government, the only system was an organized robbery. Tax gatherers took a certain part of each man's produce, and more if they could get it, and different officials exacted money under various pretexts. There was no justice, and a Turkish officer could rarely be found who was not open to corruption. People kept together by their church. A Greek was a man who belonged to the Greek Church, and an Armenian belonged to the Armenian Church. An Armenian bride was allowed to speak only to her husband for a year after her marriage, to her mother-in-law for the next two years, and then to her sisters for the next two years. He had visited Mount Arrarat, which was an extinct volcano; there were craters and cones all around it, the same as at Haleakala or Maui. It is 17,000 feet high, and stands in the middle of a large plain, which is 2,400 feet above the sea level. There is no fruit and but little water, except what comes from the snow. Although all the animals were said to have been turned loose on Arrarat, there are none to be seen but a few insects and an occasional hare. The Armenians believe the ark is on the top of the mountain, surrounded by a fine cloud, and guarded by angels, and that it is impossible for a man to climb to the top of the mountain. There was a legend that a man had tried to ascend seven times but fell asleep each time and, on the last, dreamt that he had been rewarded. He awoke finding a piece of the ark in his hand, and this piece was now in the Museum so that the truth of the story was conclusive.

The lecturer then graphically described his own ascent of the mountain and the view, extending 300 miles in all directions, from the top. Below him was the spot where the garden of Eden was supposed to be. He was subsequently presented to an Arch-Evangelist, at the head of a body of monks, who refused to believe that he had made the ascent. He had himself found a piece of wood at a height of 13,000 ft., above the growth of any trees, and felt justified in thinking it must be a piece of gopher wood.

In reference to the government he said that people, first going to Turkey, thought it would end in a few weeks, after being there a few weeks, they thought it would end in a few months, and, after a few months, they gave it a few years. If there were any change Russia, and Austria would probably secure part of the Turkish empire. The lecturer concluded by saying that the only good work done in Turkey had been effected by the missionaries.

On motion of Mr. P. C. Jones Jr, seconded by Mr. T. H. Davies, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer.
